During McKoy's career at Carver, he became known as "The Man of Steel." Coach Jim Bovender suffered with mixed emotions as he utilized McKoy as his "bruising fullback" and/or his "bone-crushing linebacker." Coach Bo said his offense or defense was slack when Rodney was on the opposite side of the ball.

At Winston-Salem State coach Bill Hayes pulled out all stops to recruit the "Budding Superstar" with the recent NCAA Proposition "48" and high college board score mandated. McKoy, an academic club scholar and honors student, became a prized addition for the WSSU Rams.

Rodney McKoy presently instills the values he learned as an athlete - among his loving family, namely: honesty, reliability, firmness and Christian ethics.

Coach Tom Muse, Sr. praised Stanfield for his ball handling as well as outstanding defense; Coach Muse observed that he never saw the 6-1 dynamo take the same shot twice; and the unorthodox shooter had to be appreciated. His strange, off-balance act made him Parkland's most consistent player, not its Sporadic. I don't remember him having an off night, said Muse, you could always count on him.

DAN R. "Danny" TRAYLOR

Category: Player

School: R.J. Reynolds High

Lettered: Basketball

Achievement: All city-county (1968, 1969)- Tri-Captain ('69)

All Northwest Metro 4A Conference (1968, 1969)

Member, 1st Annual Journal & Sentinel All Southern Squad (1969)

All State (1969)

Parade Magazine's 13th Annual All America, Top 25, Prep Basketball Team 1969

"Danny" Traylor became one of the most sought-after prospects in North Carolina after his junior year as a TO prep star. Upon graduation, he was deluded with scholarship offers from dozens of Division I colleges/coaches, including Kentucky (Adolph "the Baron" Rupp), UNC-Chapel Hill (Dean Smith), UCLA (John Wooten), Davidson ("Lefty" Driesell) Wake Forest, Duke, N.C. State, Alabama, Tennessee and the South Carolina "Gamecocks." Coach Frank McGuire; the fonner world-famous mentor at Carolina (UNC), impressed "Danny" with his enthusiastic and "dapper" approach to recruiting blue-chip players. Traylor became a "Gamecock" and he helped rule the roost during his four-year collegiate career.

This R.J. Reynolds High All-America (23ppg., 17rpg, defensive giant and shot blocker) now joins a select group of his peers who are WS/FC High School Hall of Famers": Steve Joyner, Teddy East, Wilke "Super Sub" Griffin, and Nigel

Alston

Presently, Traylor enjoys his Supervisory position with Reynolds American Tobacco Co.
